Introduction

Lord Eversley, the former Liberal MP and minister, founded the Commons Preservation Society in 1865. The aim of the society was to save London commons for the enjoyment and recreation of the public. Its committee members included such important figures as Octavia Hill, the social reformer, Sir Robert Hunter, solicitor and later co-founder of the National Trust, Professor Huxley and the MP's Sir Charles Dilke and James Bryce. Most of the society's members initially came from the south east, so their interests focused on London. In 1899 the Commons Preservation Society amalgamated with the National Footpaths Society, adopting the title Commons Open Spaces Society and Footpath Preservation Society. The shortened name, Open Spaces Society was adopted in the 1980s. The society promoted important pieces of legislation, including the Commons Act of 1876 and 1899. Today it's principal task is advising local authorities, commons committees, voluntary bodies, and the general public on the appropriation of commons and other open spaces. It also scrutinises applications that affect public rights of way. It has no branch organisation but works with local and regional bodies. It's membership, therefore, is small. The society also publishes a quarterly journal as well as a wide variety of literature.

These papers were formerly in the possession of the Commons and Footpaths Preservation Society – now known as the Open Spaces Society.

Papers were deposited in the House of Lords Record Office (now the Parliamentary Archives) between 1967 and 1986, where they were catalogued as Forest and Common Papers (Reference code: FCP). In July 2025, the collection was transferred to the Museum of English Rural Life and incorporated into the Open Spaces Society (SR OSS) fonds as a sub-fonds (SR OSS/FCP).

Catalogue was edited for CALM 2000 by Jennie Lynch in October 2001 and subsequently migrated to Axiell Collections in July 2025.
