

Royal Agricultural Society of England

SR RASE

Records in this collection include records of the Board of Agriculture and Internal Improvement, also known as The Old Board of Agriculture. The Board was established by Sir John Sinclair and received its Letters Patent on 23 August 1793. It aimed to inform farmers across the country of best farming practice, and encourage them to experiment with new techniques. The Board achieved this by publishing information on farming methods, and by assisting farming societies. It also conducted land surveys in order to record the agricultural performance of the nation. By the early 1820s, the agricultural slump in Britain resulted in a lack of enthusiasm for the Board's continued activity, and in 1822 it was dissolved.

The main bulk of the collection relates to the Royal Agricultural Society. In 1838 the Royal Agricultural Society took its place as the central authority on agricultural practice, with a greater focus on science and modernisation. It received its Royal Charter in 1840, founded the Royal Agricultural College in 1845, and became increasingly prominent as it advised the government on agricultural legislation throughout the latter part of the 19th century. The Royal Agricultural Society still exists today as the foremost advocate of the use of science and technology in farming.

The records consist of the archive of the Old Board of Agriculture 1793 – 1822 (SR RASE OB), and the archive of the Royal Agricultural Society from 1838 - 1960. The Old Board material contains a valuable run of minutes, including those recorded by Arthur Young while Secretary of the Board, the original Letters Patent, financial records and agricultural surveys and essays. The Royal Agricultural Society's records, include accounts, administration material, legal material, social and personal material, specimen farm account books, journals.

The Collection covers the year's 1793 - 1960.
