

Little Mouse and the dandelion fairies

Little Mouse was enjoying the sunshine on a Spring morning when he noticed a beautiful yellow glow from the corner of the garden.

He rushed over to have a look and saw that it was a flower that he had seen before but he just couldn't remember its name.

Just then there was a loud ROAR and Little Mouse got such a fright that he had to sit down for a few seconds. Had the flower really made that noise?

A cheeky face peeped around the edge of the flower and one of the Spring fairies said. 'Surprise! I'm a dandelion fairy.'

Little Mouse chuckled. Of course, it was a dandelion! The petals were like the gleaming mane of a lion and the shape of the leaves were like sharp lion teeth.

A few days later Little Mouse went back to the same spot but to his surprise the dandelion wasn't there anymore. There was just a ball of white fluff quivering in the wind.

The fairy that had frightened him before came over and told him that the dandelion flower was now a clock and was ready to send its seeds off on the wind to grow new dandelion plants.

He also told Little Mouse that each seed is carried through the air by a fairy that grants the wishes of anyone that helps the wind to blow them to their new places in the garden.

Little Mouse took a deep breath and then blew as hard as he could and quickly made a wish to be carried off through the air with the dandelion clock seeds.

If you find a dandelion clock, you could do that too.
